About JADPRO LIVE

The thirteenth annual JADPRO Live conference will be held in conjunction with the annual meeting of the Advanced Practitioner Society for Hematology and Oncology (APSHO) on October 23–26, 2025, in National Harbor, Maryland. The audience for this CE-accredited live conference consists of nurse practitioners, physician assistants, clinical nurse specialists, advanced degree nurses, hematology/oncology nurses, pharmacists, and physicians.

This conference includes a variety of interactive educational sessions designed for the advanced practitioner and featuring the latest in oncology care:

- Presentations with Q&A
- Interactive case study groups
- Workshops with experts in the field
- Panel discussions

About JADPRO

Advanced practitioners (APs) in oncology have always sought education to help them deliver the best care possible to their patients. But in years past, the only peer-reviewed journals they could look to get that information from were those targeted toward oncology nurses or physicians. While these journals had plenty of relevant content, they didn't provide education at the level APs required.

To address this need, in 2010, the Journal of the Advanced Practitioner in Oncology, (JADPRO) was launched. Finally, oncology APs had a peer-reviewed journal that was written by and for advanced practitioners.

About APSHO

Working on a team is nothing new to APs in oncology. Although APs are veterans in terms of working with their colleagues, in the past it was often difficult to connect with like-minded APs from different organizations and practice types in order to share experiences and information. It seemed like a natural extension to work with influential leaders in the field of oncology advanced practice to oversee the creation of the Advanced Practitioner Society for Hematology and Oncology (APSHO). APSHO is now over 6,000 members strong.
